“Top o’ the Morning:” Myth and Reality | Dialect Blog

So it appears “top o’ the morning” was indeed spoken in the Victorian era (at the latest), although Kichham suggests that the phrase was already something of an affectation. While I can’t put a date on when “TotM” started to recede, a rough guess might put its extinction at some point in the early 20th Century. Just how widespread the phrase was (if ever) is unclear to me.

Urban Dictionary: top o' the mornin' to ya

top o' the mornin' to ya unknown A phrase nobody has ever actually really said in ireland because it was made up by big shot holywood dickheads, but for some reason all the stupid americans think its a common phrase in ireland anyways, but in reality if they said it to an actual irish person they would ether get laughed at or knocked the fuck out for being retarded.
